Collaboration

It has become common practice for Primary Care Providers (PCPs) and Behavioral Health Providers to work together to address the needs of the whole person. Amerigroup gave the following reasons why providers should work together:

- Physical and behavioral health go hand in hand and resultantly impact each other;
- Collaboration is best for clients as providers are working toward the same goal using synergistic treatment methods that foster positive health outcomes;
- Visits to a behavioral health provider may be more frequent than those to a PCP. Sharing relevant treatment information is imperative especially when medication is used to treat issues that are addressed during counseling.

Most health insurance companies require providers to coordinate care at the following times:

- When the client begins physical or behavioral health services or discontinue treatment;
- When the client's health or treatment plan requires a change in the other provider's treatment plan;
- When a client is admitted to or discharged from the hospital;
- At least once a quarter if not otherwise warranted
